INTRODUCTION

Most people report positive and negative facts about the Philippine National Police Force. Various beliefs about their behavior relating to their jobs and attitudes toward their public role can be generally summarized as their job satisfaction.

Andres (1989) believed that there are important factors that satisfy Filipino workers. They expected to be treated humanely. They expect a two-way communication with those they work with. They want to get high performance rating because of possible promotion as a result of such rating. They want to be recognized for job well done. They work best when supported by fellow worker. They want to participate in challenging assignments.

Man should act in order to perform his job well done. He must have the will to do it by exerting the necessary effort; it is likewise important for policeman to achieve self-actualization in order to perceive his wants and needs. "Work is seen, for many persons, as mean of self-actualization, as a way of finding life role, as a means of implementing
